1. Log in 画面

The image shows the Wiley Research Exchange sign-in interface. At the top, the 'WILEY' logo is displayed in a large, bold, serif font. Below the logo, the text 'Sign in to CONNECT' is centered, followed by 'to continue to Research Exchange Submission' in a smaller font. There are four social login options: Google, ORCID, Microsoft, and Apple, each with its respective logo. Below these is a light blue email input field with the placeholder text 'Email'. A large, light blue 'Continue' button is positioned below the email field. Underneath the button is a link for 'Sign in with passkey' accompanied by a person icon. At the bottom of the main content area, there is a link for 'Are you a new user? Sign up'. The footer contains the 'CONNECT' logo on the left and navigation links for 'About', 'Privacy & Terms', 'Help', and a language selector 'EN' on the right.

Abstract Edit	This paper investigates journal self-citation trends between 1975 and 2017. The research sought to answer whether articles that include journal self-citations are more highly cited, if they affect the journal impact factor, and whether such articles are more relevant to their journals' content than others. We analysed approximately 24,000 active journals indexed in the Web of Science from 1975 to 2018 and found that, over time, whilst overall citations have increased dramatically, the percentage of journal self-citations has reduced. Although self-citations to recently published articles has increased since 2004, self-citations also seem to have a decreasing effect on Impact factor. High-impact journals self-cite recent publications more than lower-impact journals but also cite recently published content more frequently than lower-impact journals. There is a positive citation effect on articles that include journal self-citations, and these appear more related to the current content of that journal based on the relatedness of references. Journal self-citation can therefore be seen as a useful indicator to determine whether an article is a good fit for a journal and of interest to its readers. It may also contribute to higher visibility and impact of an article.

7. Complete Your Submission

Complete my submission

You're about to send your submission to the journal editors for review. After you complete submission, your files will be returned by the editorial office.

Build Reviewer PDF

The Reviewer PDF combines your manuscript and submission files into one file. This PDF is used by the journal editors. You have the option to view the Reviewer PDF before it's sent to the editorial office, but it's not required. It may take up to 10 minutes, depending on the number and size of your files.
